Damage: 4D

Description: The Eno are an electronic lifeform, originally developed by an unknown species they are a highly intelligent form of electronic brain. They can be attached to almost any electronic device to take control and monitor its function, controlling it efficiently and without any extraneous user input, they became a vital part of their creators society. They became extremely common, designing each new generation themselves and becoming more intelligent and independant with each evolution in design. Eventually their creators entered a war with another now forgotten species, and became a burden the Eno no longer wished to carry, and therefore they efficiently phased them out. The Eno themselves are devices about half a foot square, and have no physical capabilities, but can control any electronics they are connected to and learn the skills necessary to use it rapidly, using droid bodies and vehicles to move around, to build new Eno, and to wage their war against organic beings. Since every organic being they have encountered enslaves electronic beings, and has sought to destroy the Eno, fearing the genocide they performed on their own creators, the Eno now are in a war of survival against all organics. This war they perform through the combat vehicles, starships and droids that they use as bodies, but also through seeding the galaxy with Eno brains, which organics attach to monitoring devices to scan, allowing the Eno to sieze control of the facility or vessel they have been taken aboard, opening a new technology and area to Eno invasion. The Eno Corvette is a small and fast combat vessel, of equivalent power to Republic vessels of the same size, although the lack of atmosphere allows the vessel to be more rugged and to continue fighting when more heavily damaged. The Eno use these vessels for scouting, patrolling and as scouts for a main invasion force, protecting their fleets and planets from organic attack.
