Equipped with:

Inexpensive Vocabular: MagnaDroids have an inexpensive vocabulator, although their auditory sensors are advanced, allowing them to hear General Grievous' ultrasonic instructions but not reply.

Backup Processors: MagnaDroids have backup processor systems located in their bodies, allowing them to keep functioning and fighting even if their heads are removed.

MagnaPod Feet: MagnaDroids feet end in magnapods, which can magnetically adhere to metal surfaces such as starship hulls.

Enhanced Range Eyes: MagnaDroids have infrared visual sensors allowing them to see in the dark (+2D to search in darkness), which also include macrobinocular features.

Duranium Plating: MagnaDroids are covered with armour plates, making them heavily resistant to damage (+1D vs Damage).

Tow Cable: MagnaGuards can deploy a 10 meter tow cable, which can be magnetically adhered to metal surfaces, this gives them a second skill roll to catch onto objects if they should fail (if falling from a surface, being sucked into space, etc)

Magnetised Limbs: The surface of a Magnaguard can be magnetised, giving them an additional +1D to strength to hold onto metal objects.

Limb Extension: MagnaGuard arms can extend to twice their normal length.

Cloaking System: MagnaGuards have a built in cloaking system, giving them +1D to Sneak and Hide Skills.

Self Destruct: Another tool was a violent self destruct sequence, used if the system was still functional after severe damage. Blast Radius: 2 meters, Damage: 5D

Missile System: These particular droids could fire pairs of small seeking missiles from internal magazines in their back plating. Fire Control: 1D, Damage :4D

Description: "The Massiff" was a highly-modified MagnaGuard droid which was a personal project of the Gen'Dai Rayvis. The modifications led to a ruthless, hyper-enhanced 'killing machine'. It would not stop fighting until the last of its processes failed.

The Massiff was destroyed by the Jedi Knight Cal Kestis in 9 BBY in the crashed Lucrehulk core ship of the Primacy on Koboh.
