Capsule: The CC-3 is the Corporate Alliance's equivalent to the Trade Federation's Battle Droid. The Security Droid is a far more advanced combatant than the B-1, and consequently the Corporate Alliance cannot deploy it in vast multitudes for financial reasons. Luckily for the Alliance, this has proven unnecessary, as the highly intelligent war droid is quite capable of taking on and overwhelming average ground troops. With an exceedingly durable chassis, a fast ground speed, repeating blasters, and deadly flesh-filleting combat claws, even veteran combatants have broken and run at the charge of CC-3s.
Neyrriar Automotronics, a Koorivan droid manufacturer, was in the process of bringing suit against Baktoid Combat Automata when the Clone Wars broke out. They argued (correctly) that the B2 super battle droid’s design contained at least 16 distinct cases of BCA infringing on Neyrriar’s CC-3 patents, specifically in the design of the armor and chassis of the B2. The formation of the Confederacy of Independent Systems and the eruption of galactic warfare quickly made this issue moot.
