Hellfire Light Repulsortank

The need for a standardized repulsortank in the Palvar Defense Force became quite obvious during the long and bloody Battle of Palan, in which PDF forces were entrenched against rival MetaCorp forces for nearly four years of continuous and ineffective fighting. Unfortunately for those PDF soliders on Palan, the Hellfile light repulsortank came only mere weeks after the final cruise missile assault on the MetaCorp lines. The first Hellfires off the lines were deployed to the Hellfire assault regiment for which they were named.

The Hellfire repulsortank is typical of many tanks found throughout the galaxy with a large weapons turret located on top of the vehicle and the main access hatch on the top of that. An antipersonnel repeating blaster is mounted just in front of the hatch, allowing the gunner to quickly man it if needed. However, unlike most repulsortanks in service, the main weapon on the Hellfire is not an energy weapon, it is a large railgun. The railgun fires a projectile several times the speed of sound via magnetic propulsion. Unlike many projectile weapons, the railgun is almost silent in operation as there is no internal explosion propelling the round.

The Hellfire is the most common repulsortank in the Palvar Defense Force and can be found almost anywhere there is a significant number of PDF soldiers.
