Description:

In the early years of the Galactic Civil War, Sorosuub allied itself with the Empire in an effort to retain its independence after the Clone Wars (Sorosuub was a principal member of the Commerce Guild). With the Empire's favor, Sorosuub was able to force its control over Sullust and the chief colony worlds in the sector. As the years passed and the Empire's atrocities became more apparent, public unrest started to weaken the company's grip over the Sullustans. Sometime after the Battle of Yavin, Alliance sympathizers wrested control of the company from the pro-Imperial leadership, and Sorosuub began covertly directing resources to the Alliance.

In the early years of the war, the Rebellion had to deal with decades-old warships held together by the sweat and ingenuity of the Rebel technicians. With major-shipbuilding worlds like Sullust and Dac throwing their support behind the Alliance, Mon Mothma asked for their full effort in modernizing the Fleet. Sorosuub tasked their primary R&D team with designing an effective mid-sized warship that fit into the modest budget of the still-growing Rebellion.

The result of their efforts was the Pulsar-class Attack Destroyer. Reminiscent of the Commerce Guild Support Ships sub-contracted to Sorosuub for supplemental construction during the Clone Wars, the Pulsar features a stripped-down hull and a variety of weaponry. The slim profile and powerful ion drives give the destroyer excellent speed and maneuverability for a ship its size. However, its armor and shielding are modest and not able to stand up to the heavy cannons of larger capital ships in a prolonged engagement. The attack destroyer's strength in combat lies in its varied armament. Heavy turbolasers and ion turrets allow the Pulsar to bloody heavier cruisers, while its light batteries and point-defense guns are effective against escorts, corvettes, and starfighters. To round out its utility, ventral launch tubes on the engines pod deploy gravity mines to provide hyperspace interdiction on the battlefield.

The prototype, Pulsar, participated in the Battle of Endor. The crew (and design) served commendably, fighting valiantly protecting the medical frigate Renewal from a pressed attack by the Victory-II Star Destroyer Dominance. The first squadron of Pulsar Destroyers left the shipyards 6 months after Endor, and the design was used extensively to patrol the Borderlands in the establishing years of the New Republic. With its similarity to the Rebel Assault Frigate, the light destroyer integrated into heavy attack lines and assault squadrons in the Fleet. The Pulsar Attack Destroyer saw heavy combat during Thrawn's assault on the galaxy and the emergence of the reborn Emperor the following year.
