Equipment D6 / Robolobotomy

Name: Robolobotomy
Type: Droid Memory Diagnostic Device
Cost: 500 credits
Availability: 2
Game Notes: This machine is usually used for retrieving information from a damaged droids memory, for analysis after accidents. However during the Clone Wars these consoles were used to interrogate the memories of destroyed droids for intelligence purposes. The console adds 2D to the users Droid Programming/Repair skill to access memories within the droid brain, this is opposed by the droids Knowledge attribute, a successful roll allows access to one memory ("Show me an image of your commander.", "Tell me your orders.", etc), and can be repeatedly attempted on different subjects. However a failed roll leads to the Droid Brain burning out in it's attempt to resist, destroying all knowledge contained.

Description: A robolobotomy was a procedure performed on droids to extract data from their droid brain.

Robolobotomy was used on the T-series tactical droid TJ-55 on Christophsis to gather more information about stolen intelligence, but was unsuccessful. Robolobotomy was used by Aayla Secura on a tactical droid after a battle. Gregar Typho also used one on a B1 battle droid to gain information on Dr. Nuvo Vindi and his Blue Shadow Virus bombs.

Stats by FreddyB, descriptive text from WookieePedia
Image copyright LucasArts
Any complaints, writs for copyright abuse, etc should be addressed to the Webmaster FreddyB.