Creatures D6 / High-hound

Name: High-hound
Type: Flying Predator
Homeworld: Aduba-3

Dexterity: 2D+2
Perception: 1D+2
Strength: 4D

Special Abilities

Claws,:High hounds have large claws, which give them a 1D bonus to Damage, Lifting and Brawling (to grab and lift targets).

Compound Eyes: High Hound eyes are capable of spotting small moving targets from great heights, giving them a bonus 1D to all Search rolls.

Move: 24 (flying) 5 (walking)
Average height: 2.4 Meters
Average wingspan: 6 Meters
Orneriness: 3D+1

Description: High-hounds (derogatorily called Man-hawks, Stone-faces, or Birdies) were a species of birdlike scavengers native to Aduba-3. They resembled large birds of prey, but had almost Human-like heads. They had compound eyes, containing many facets which served different purposes. The center facets made out colors and shapes, while the outside facets detected movement. They were omnivorous, getting their moisture from plants and protein from meat. They were known to chase Humans, scavenge corpses, and even eat other high-hounds.

High-hounds spent their lives constantly migrating, following rain-fronts. Their arrival served as both a blessing and a curse to farmers. While it meant that the rainy season had arrived, it also meant that much of their maze-stalk crop could be lost to the scavengers. As a result, many farmers would build effigies to burn at the corners of their fields to frighten them off.

Han Solo once rescued Merri from a high-hound.

Stats by FreddyB, descriptive text from WookieePedia
Image copyright LucasArts.
Any complaints, writs for copyright abuse, etc should be addressed to the Webmaster FreddyB.