Races D6 / Delf

Delf

In general, the Delf are somewhat shorter than the average humans and bear little to no physical resemblance. Delf have been known to have a variety of exotic skin colors, ranging from several shades of blue to odd mixtures of orange and green. The Delf are pipedal humanoids with a stub of a tail that is often curled away for convience. Every Delf has green, slit eyes that aid in night vision. Other facial features include a protruding lower jaw, small nose, and large ears that hug the sides of their heads and run from the jawline and end in a point at the top.

Delf society has remained unchanged for several thousand years, with the exception of the arrival of the Empire on the their planet. The Imperial takeover was considered more or less trivial to the majority of the Delf population, accepting it as a much better idea than enslavement or death. The apparent willingness to conform to the New Order impressed Moff Uhlmann enough to spare the planet the typical strip mining and other hardships that often came to worlds populated by non-humans once the Empire took over. After the collapse of the Empire as a whole, Moff Uhlmann faced a serious shortage of able soldiers and even began conscripting the Delf into the Imperial Army to fill the more tedious jobs that regular troopers could no longer be wasted on.

The Delf are usually very tolerant and it takes a lot of work to upset one. They tend to find some sort of pleasure in lending aid to those who need it, although they do not go out of their way to do so.

Story Factors:

Imperial Influence: The Delf surrended their world to the Empire and accepted the Empire as their new just government. The Delf populace was treated with something resembling respect and typically harbor little to no ill feelings toward the Empire as a whole. Those Delf who chose to willing become Imperial citizens were given the full rights of any other Imperial citizen. A few Delf have even been conscripted into the Imperial Army, always being assigned to defense duty on board of a small starship that isn't important enough to waste valuable Human troopers on.
