Description: The MG34 eventually resulted from the testing of many different light-machine guns, developed by early RanCorp engineers. The basis of the whole project was the idea of a single gun design acting in both light and heavy roles. That is, being able to be used as an assault weapon, or an emplaced defensive weapon, and being compromised in neither by design. The result was a weapon with modularized accessories and ammunition feed methods. Although it was possible to fire the gun from the hip, this proved difficult and inaccurate, so an integral bipod was made to fire the weapon more accurately in the assault. The machine gun was also well designed to be emplaced in a vehicle, and dedicated AA mounts were designed.
