Description: Ibdun Dand was a Tarsunt male and the father to Resistance controller Vober Dand. While Ibfun was originally against his son joining the Resistance, fearing what might happen, he eventually joined himself after the Hosnian Cataclysm. Dand served as part of the ground crew alongside his son and celebrated with him and the rest of the Resistance following their victory at the Battle of Exegol.

Ibdun Dand was a Tarsunt male who initially forbade his son Vober Dand from joining the Resistance during their cold war against the First Order; however, Dand disobeyed him and became a controller in the Resistance's Ground Logistics Division. After the First Order destroyed the entire Hosnian system during the Hosnian Cataclysm in 34 ABY, Ibdun joined his son as a member of the Resistance, serving alongside him in the ground crew.

In 35 ABY, he was amongst the personnel that was stationed in the Resistance base on the jungle moon of Ajan Kloss. After the Resistance and its allies defeated the First Order and the Sith Eternal above the planet Exegol, both Dands joined in with the celebrations that took place at the base. During the celebration, the Kessurian thilas Wilsa Teshlo patted Ibdun on the back while he stood with Vober and the pair cheered in celebration.

Personality and traits
Ibdun Dand initially forbid his son from joining the Resistance because he feared the worse, but after the Hosnian Cataclysm revealed the ruthlessness of the First Order he came to appreciate his son's bravery. While serving in the Resistance he learned more about his son from the people they both worked with. Ibdun had gray skin, black eyes and graying hair typical of an ageing Tarsunt.

Equipment
Ibdun Dand wore a yellow jumpsuit with a brown belt and gloves and an orange headset.
