Description: Koska Reeves was a human female Mandalorian who was a member of the Nite Owls. Several years after the Great Purge, Reeves was on the moon of Trask, where she helped steal an Imperial Gozanti-class cruiser alongside Lady Bo-Katan Kryze, Axe Woves, and Din Djarin.

Meeting Din Djarin

As a member of the Nite Owls, Koska Reeves was on the moon of Trask with Bo-Katan Kryze to seize weapons the Empire had purchased using plunder from its conquest of Mandalore. While walking in the black market port, Reeves observed the Mandalorian named Din Djarin, accompanied by his foundling, Grogu, as he attempted to locate others of his kind. After seeing that she had been noticed by him, she retreated from view.

Reeves was one of a trio of Nite Owls who came to Djarin's aid when a crew of Quarren lured him out to sea as a ploy to loot his beskar. During the ambush, Grogu was swallowed by a mamacore. After helping to slay the Quarren, she dove into the water to retrieve Grogu. When she, Kryze, and Axe Woves removed their helmets to introduce themselves, their action challenged Djarin's sectarian interpretation of the Way by claiming to be Mandalorian despite revealing their faces; she visually expressed disdain for the nature of his upbringing once Kryze deduced he was a Child of the Watch. After Djarin took off with his jetpack, she and the other Nite Owls scuttled the Quarrens' ship.

Back in the port, Reeves and her two companions again saved Djarin from a second ambush by those looking to avenge the failure of the first, after which the trio invited their fellow Mandalorian for a drink. At the inn, the Nite Owls and Djarin had struck a deal to get him in contact with the Jedi in return for his aid in their mission, seizing weapons to take back Mandalore. In preparation for the attack, the Mandalorians sat upon Djarin's damaged Razor Crest to observe their target, a Gozanti-class cruiser.

Attack on the Gozanti-class cruiser
They planned to hit the cruiser with an element of surprise, hitting it right before ascending. The four Mandalorians boarded at the side of the cruiser and Reeves took off with a stormtrooper in her arms, dropping the soldier to his death. In the ship she moved together with Djarin against the walls to hide from the enemies' blasterfire until they were trapped in the ship's cargo control area by a panicking officer. Free of the distraction of blaster fire, the attackers were able to depressurize the hold and vent the Imperials into the sky. Reeves and Axe both stood by Kryze when she changed the terms of their deal by ordering the hijacking of the ship instead of only seizing the weapons. At the same time, Moff Gideon ordered the captain to kill remaining Imperial flight crew and crash the ship into the ocean in an attempt to kill the Mandalorians; on their way to the cockpit, Reeves counted down the ship's rapid descent to the surface using her Mandalorian vambrace.

Once in the cockpit, Reeves and Djarin took over manual control and barely prevented the ship from crashing into the ocean of Trask. Reeves continued piloting the ship and warned the others about a distress signal. After Djarin left the ship, Reeves flew the cruiser into the atmosphere and prepared to jump into hyperspace.

Equipment

Koska Reeves had dark blue beskar armor and black bodyglove, a rocket pack, and Mandalorian vambraces. She carried a WESTAR-35 blaster pistol. She wore a cloak when observing Djarin after his arrival on Trask.
