Description: Graxol Kelvyyn was an Anx male slave trader and an obsessive gambler who sold living cargo throughout the Outer Rim Territories around the year 32 BBY. His business was based on the planet Ryloth, but pleasure frequently brought him to the world of Tatooine; there, Kelvyyn bet on Podracing events. Often on his arm was the Lethan Twi'lek Shakka, his property and love interest. In 32 BBY, they both attended Tatooine's Boonta Eve Classic Podrace and viewed the competition from the private box of Kelvyyn's friend, the Toydarian merchant Watto.

Kelvyyn initially wagered that the Dug racer Sebulba would win the event. However, impressed with Watto's young Human slave Anakin Skywalker, the Anx placed several bets on the boy after the competition began. When Skywalker won the race, Kelvyyn smugly demanded wupiupi from Watto, who had shown little faith in his own slave. Years later, the sentientologist Tem Eliss mentioned Kelvyyn in his academic writings; although Kelvyyn was a gentle and loving being, Eliss considered him a dishonorable example of the Anx species.

Biography
The Anx male Graxol Kelvyyn lived during the waning years of the Galactic Republic. Operating from the planet Ryloth, he was active as a slave trader throughout the Outer Rim Territories, where he sold living cargo to smugglers who in turn shipped the slaves across much of the galaxy. An obsessive gambler, Kelvyyn frequently visited the planet Tatooine to attend and bet on Podracing events alongside his friend Watto, a Toydarian merchant. At the Podraces, the two of them became acquainted with Diva Shaliqua, a Human/Theelin hybrid slave who belonged to the crime lord Jabba the Hutt.

Shortly before 32 BBY, Kelvyyn fell in love with his slave Shakka, a Lethan Twi'lek female. She became a fixture on his arm at social gatherings, and in 32 BBY, both of them attended the Boonta Eve Classic Podrace at Tatooine's Mos Espa Grand Arena, wherein they joined Watto and several of the Toydarian's other associates in his private viewing box high above the racing track. Confident in the abilities of the Dug racer Sebulba, Kelvyyn wagered 50,000 credits that he would win the day's event.

Anakin Skywalker, a young Human slave of Watto's, was also entered in the race, and when his Podracer failed to start, Kelvyyn and his comrades laughed at the boy's misfortune. Skywalker persevered and got his vehicle going, but Watto was sceptical that the ragtag machine would be able to finish the race. Kelvyyn and Watto's friend Weazel both wagered twenty wupiupi that Skywalker would in fact complete all three laps, and Watto eagerly took the bet. After Sebulba completed the first lap in record time, Watto offered ten wupiupi that he would set a record for the entire race; Kelvyyn upped the ante to fifteen and accepted. The Anx made one further wager with Watto: that Skywalker would win the entire event. As Kelvyyn watched anxiously, Skywalker overtook Sebulba and emerged the victor. Although a furious Watto argued with his guests, Kelvyyn and Weazel demanded payment.

Years later, Kelvyyn was discussed by the Iyra sentientologist Tem Eliss in The University of Sanbra Guide to Intelligent Life, a book that showcased some of the galaxy's myriad sentient species. Kelvyyn was presented as an example of a dishonorable Anx whose gambling and slave trading were cited as vices.

Personality and traits
Graxol Kelvyyn was a skilled trader who dealt in slaves and maintained a network of seedy smugglers throughout the galaxy. He was knowledgeable of the workings of criminal organizations and was adept at intimidating others. However, Kelvyyn was also a gentle man and was well-liked by the residents of Tatooine's city of Mos Espa, who thought of him as a local. He fell in love with his slave Shakka, but Professor Tem Eliss nevertheless considered him a dishonorable individual and believed that falling for one's own property was a mistake that no slaver could afford to make.

A known aficionado of Podracing, Kelvyyn enjoyed the risks and rewards of the races and gambled on them obsessively. He was not averse to raising a bet's stakes. Kelvyyn made separate wagers on two different racers to win the Boonta Eve Classic in 32 BBY and continued to gamble with Watto after the race began. Although he laughed and clapped when Anakin Skywalker's Podracer failed to start, he was afterward impressed with the boy's performance and placed multiple bets on him. Kelvyyn taunted Watto when failing to bet on his own slave lost the Toydarian money.

Kelvyyn was a hairless male Anx with blue eyes and creamy white skin. He stood considerably taller than 1.37 meters. Able to fluently speak, read, and write both the Anx language and Galactic Basic Standard, Kelvyyn could additionally speak Huttese, Rodese, Shyriiwook, Shusugaunt, and Twi'leki. Although he was trained in the use of martial arts, the Anx carried a hold-out blaster on his person.
