

Starships D6 / Neyomal MegaCruiser

Neyomal MegaCruiser

The Neyomal are a malevolent race of starfaring beings. They are not of this galaxy, or any other galaxy really. They are from another dimension, possibly the realm known as otherspace but it is not known for sure. They appeared through strange inter dimensional portals which actually cut through the fabric of 'realspace' and 'hyperspace' which is what leads people to believe they hail from 'otherspace'. These portals are characterized by bright swirls of light and colour through which the ships drop into space. The Neyomal's ships are organic in nature and possibly even sentient. The Neyomal who crew it, use telepathic links to join themselves to the ships and use extended telepathic abilities as sensors.

The Neyomal Megacruiser is the epitome of power in a capital ship. It has a rounded organic form with an almost perfectly smooth hull. A strange spikelike assembly at the rear of the ship comes off the drive assembly, possibly maneuvering thrusters. There is a band around the ships' equator that glows and pulses with energy, as well as two fin like appendages. Four wavy arms come off around the band at the very front of the ship. This is the energy emitter assembly. Energy is charged up in the fins and the band, both send the energy into a focusing point at the center of the four arms. The energy then runs up along the arms like on a Mothership. However rather than crackling energy and a ball that's released, the space between the four arms totally fills when fired at full power. At full power, this weapon is slightly more powerful than the second death Star's Superlaser and is fully capable of destroying a planet. Lesser amounts of energy from the weapon can still easily blow apart any capital ship.

The ships' form is deceiving though. It would seem this is the only weapon system on board but that is not so. Heavy energy pulse batteries are built into the hull under the uppermost layer. These batteries run along on hidden tracks and charge energy up through the outer hull itself releasing silvery-blue beams of impressive destructive power. The combined batteries are capable of reducing a world to slag by themselves. Smaller versions of the batteries form short range, anti-starfighter defense to prevent 'trench run syndrome'. Just a few weeks before the Battle of Endor, one of these ships appeared over a world in the Plavar Sector. Sector forces tried to repel it to no avail.

recordings of the incident show an unbelievable amount of silver-blue streaks lancing out in every direction from the ship pulverising capital ships and starfighters alike. The world, controlled by the Empire, then witnessed the full fury of the ships' energy emitter at full blast. The ships that escaped told the tale and showed the sensor logs and recordings, and still everyone found it hard to believe.

The strangest thing is that the ship's hull appears to be one piece, and though looks organic in design it doesn't look organic or natural. Yet the whole ship seems to be one piece. There are no viewports hatches or docking bays either, so it is not known how the crew gets on board. These ships are able to also open inter-dimensional portals between realspace and their home dimension. It is severely hoped, but not known, that the Neyomals only have one of these ships.

Jump Gate:

A Neyomal MegaCruiser can open Hyperspace Jumpgates through which ships can enter and come out at the decided destination. The ships passing through one of these Jump gates will move as if they had an x1 hyperdrive. The Jumpgate closes as soon as the MegaCruiser passes into it, and the end point gate closes once the mothership comes out of it.
