Description: Cohmac Vitus was a human male Jedi Master of the Jedi Order during the High Republic Era, renowned as both a scholar and mystic. He was formerly the Padawan of Master Simmix. As a Padawan, Vitus was involved in the Eiram–E'ronoh crisis, an event that affected him into his time as a Jedi Master twenty-five years later. During that time, Vitus was one of four Jedi who traveled aboard the starship Vessel to the Starlight Beacon, only to be forced off course due to the Great Disaster.

Personality and traits
Cohmac Vitus stood at average height for a male human, but appeared tall due to his slender, angular build, the thick greying black hair he wore down almost to his shoulders and a gravitas that accompanied his presence.

Vitus was a wise Jedi Master who appreciated ancient history, which caused the Padawan Reath Silas to look up to him. Vitus was outwardly very calm and methodically logical but internally, he was rocked by the death of his master and, although he buried his grief as was dictated by Jedi teachings, could not help but feel angry about Simmix's death and was even angrier at the fact that Jedi teachings tried to make him ignore such feelings. Furthermore, Vitus was troubled by the split between the light side and the dark side of the Force espoused by the Jedi Order and believed that the refusal to examine the darkness could potentially make it even stronger. When Vitus thought nobody was watching him, he appreciated the sight of Xylan Graf's chest when it was partially bared.

Powers and abilities
Cohmac Vitus had an enormous knowledge of histories and ancient cultures, among other subjects, and was considered a notable mystic among his peers. As a result of this, he had an analytical mind capable of referencing a broad spectrum of information. He also possessed a strong connection to the Force and was granted many notable abilities. Vitus was capable of sensing the energies of the dark side of the Force onboard the Amaxine station, and was able to probe deeper and understand there was a malicious intelligence behind it. Like most Jedi, Vitus could use the Force to jump many meters into the air with ease but he was also able to levitate himself a similar distance in the air. Vitus was also skilled in the usage of a lightsaber, fending off multiple Nihil at once while also effectively combating the foreign threat of the Drengir.

Equipment
Cohmac Vitus wore robes and wielded a blue lightsaber.
