Description: Lezine was a male human and outspoken critic of the Galactic Empire's occupation of the planet Ghorman.

Biography

Imperial Critic

Lezine was a male human resident of Ghorman, a planet along the Rimma Trade Route. By 3 BBY, he had become an outspoken critic of the Galactic Empire's occupation and oppression of the Ghorman people. During that year he attended a town hall in the capital city, Palmo, where he had the opportunity to speak directly to four Ghorman electors. At the meeting, he gave an passionate speech about the oppression of the Empire before being interrupted by Enza Rylanz, one of the electors, who told him to settle down and give someone else a chance to speak. Before leaving the podium, Lezine told the group that the Empire would make a prison out of Palmo before making a rude gesture by slapping his hand onto his forearm. Later during the meeting, Lezine interrupted a woman who was complaining about the building that the Empire was constructing near Palmo Plaza was in fact an Imperial armory. Despite being told that he already had his turn to speak by an elector, Lezine continued to state that the building was a fortress and that the electors knew it.

Interrupting a theft

Later in 3 BBY, Lezine was walking in Palmo at night when he came across the Ghorman Front stealing crates of weapons from an Imperial transport carrier. Samm, a member of the Front, tried to tell Lezine to walk away, but Lezine shoved him aside and continued to walk. Samm then pulled out a blaster pistol and pointed it at Lezine, once again telling him to go home. Lezine turned around and walked toward Samm, warning him that his blaster better be a toy—otherwise, he would shove it down his throat. Lezine eventually approached close enough to grab the gun and hold it away from him; however, Samm still fired, going past Lezine and killing Cinta Kaz, a member of the Axis network who was assisting the Ghorman Front in the theft. The two stopped struggling and walked over to Kaz as Vel Sartha, Kaz's lover, rushed over to her. After the pair exchanged brief final words, Lezine offered to carry her body back with the group. After placing Kaz's body in the awaiting escape transport, Lezine left the scene.

Unified Front

Lezine eventually joined the Ghorman Front by the following year. He was present at the Ghorman Front Headquarters in 2 BBY when a heated disagreement occurred between members of the group. With Carro Rylanz, the original leader of the Front arguing for more peaceful resistance and the other members arguing for more aggressive resistance, Lezine interrupted and appealed to unity reminding them that they were are Ghor regardless of how they resisted the Empire and that they couldn't let the Empire take that from them through in-fighting.

Songs and Genocide

Later that year, the Empire began landing mining rigs around the planet as part of its plan to extract Kalkite from the planet's sub-strait. The following morning in Palmo the Empire removed the barriers restricting access to Palmo Plaza effectively inviting the Ghorman people to protest. Lezine joined the protesters as they made their way to the plaza. As those around him chanted "We are the Ghor!" and "The galaxy is watching!" Lezine stayed quite as he marched with the protesters. When he arrived at the plaza he hugged Dilan, a fellow Front member before making his way through the crowd to stand near the Monument to the Fallen at the plaza's center. Shortly before Sergeant Bloy's squad began advancing toward the Monument, Lezine removed his hat and began to loudly sing the Ghorman National Anthem. Quickly joined by Dilan and Enza soon the whole crowd was singing the anthem alongside him.

As Bloy's team continued to make it through the crowd tenses rose before an Imperial sniper was ordered to shoot a member of the Imperial squad in order to start a massacre of the Ghorman people. After Imperials began firing into the crowd embers of the Ghorman Front returned fire. Lezine, Dilan and Enza ran to the edge of the plaza where they took cover behind several pillars. From cover, Lezine began firing at the Imperials with a blaster rifle provided to him by Dilan. He continued to fire from cover as Dilan threw a flame jar at a group of troopers. Lezine later helped a wounded man get to cover while Dilan provided covering fire before Dilan was shot in the gut. Lezine returned to Dilan and helped him out of the fighting before Dilan eventually collapsed and died due to his injury. Lezine stayed by Dilan mourning his friend.

Personality and traits

Lezine was a burly man with light skin, green eyes, short brown hair and a short brown beard. He spoke Ghor and could speak Galactic Basic Standard.

Equipment

During the town hall and later during the theft, Lezine wore gray vest over a light gray and brown shirt and brown suspenders. At the meeting of the Ghorman Front Lezine wore a black shirt with a tall neck. During the events of the Ghorman Massacre, he wore brown shirt, tan coat, and a brown hat with a black rim.
